

Personal Kanban
Understanding the Nature of Work
through the Simplicity of Flow
personalkanban.com

Personal Kanban "Tweet-a-ban"
Global Conference on Twitter
17 November 2009
#pkflow

Welcome to an experiment in the Twitterverse, a Personal Kanban "Tweet-a-ban."

Join your fellow Personal Kanban practitioners on the 17th of November in a global dialogue about Personal Kanban. The Tweet-a-ban will be an open-ended conversation, whomever wishes to participate will be able to. All topics related to Personal Kanban are valid; your stories, goals, criticisms are all welcome.

Why This is Cool: Since the launch of personalkanban.com this past July, we've been delighted by the massive response. Thousands of people from around the globe have begun working with it in their homes, schools, and offices, sharing their productivity successes. Thus far, we've counted Personal Kanban devotees in Ireland, England, Holland, Germany, France, Italy, Spain, Israel, Turkey, Romania, Poland, Russia, the Ukraine, China, Japan, Korea, Australia, New Zealand, India, South Africa, Brazil, Chile and across the U.S. and Canada.

Getting together a few dozen Personal Kanban practitioners in different contexts will develop the state-of-the-art, allow us all to make some awesome contacts around the world, while getting a bit of notoriety on Twitter in the process.

This is exactly what Twitter is good for - asynchronous global conversation. During the 17th Personal Kanban practitioners worldwide will be available to teach, answer questions, share their experiences and brainstorm.

The 17th is the 17th: The moment it is the 17th somewhere to the moment it is not the 17th anywhere is the period of the Tweet-a-ban. If you see conversation, join in. If you don't see conversation, jump right in and begin your own.

See you there!

Tweet-a-ban | 17 November 2009 | Exclusively on Twitter

Hosted by:

Jim Benson - @ourfounder
Tonianne DeMaria Barry - @sprezzatura
Paul Eastabrook - @pauleastabrook

To discuss: @personalkanban